AN ANTI-SLAVERY MAN'S VIEWS.

There are some anti-slavery men who perceive the absurdity of contending for the freedom of the black because he deserved and was fit for freedom, and now hedging him about with Freedmen's Bureaus and other forms of "protection," all of which take it for granted that he is not fit for freedom.

In a speech recently made at Milwaukee by Hon. C. L. Sholes, who proclaimed himself an anti slavery man of eighteen years' standing -a speech marked by breadth of view and sound logic-this point was well made:

"Eighteen years ago I embarked in this antislavery war on the theory that the African, if given his personal freedom, could thereafter care for himself. Yet after this lapse of eighteen years, and he is free, I am met with the assurance that he needs all kinds of protection. That he will walk hesitatingly in his new condition, that he may stumble is probable; but if he is to work out his own destiny, if he is to achieve his own salvation, and it he is capable of doing it, let him begin now and at once. Every hour's dependence on a new protector and supporter, of any kind or nature, is not only a public proclamation of his own inability, but it fosters and encourages that inability, until his last state becomes infinitely worse than his first. If we are to have bureaus for his protection, if the nation must be taxed for his support, if we must maintain armies for his defence, let it be after he has himself demonstrated his incapacity; and let us who have fought his battles for the last twenty years, on the ground of his capacity, not be the fist to make proclamation that it was all a sham.

The same speech exhibited a just appreciation of the importance and the safety to the whole country of the restoration of the South to its normal condition of representation :

"The South has been conquered in this strife; she acknowledge it, she lays down her arms, accepts the results of the war, and asks again her place in the national councils, and agrees to perform her duties and functions in our common Union. It is all that is necessary to make perfect that peace which has been conqured by arms. True, we shall have collisions with them, but they will be only collisions of opinion such collisions as our free institutions invite and as are necessary to their perfect develop ment. No one with ordinary sense expects again a resort to arms on the part of the South. Her terrible experience her present condition are guarantees against that while memory, tradition. or even history lasts. Can we not, then trust the sentiment and intelligence of the nation in this strife of opinion? Can we not trust something to those inspiring, guiding, and directing principles which underlie our whole fabric of politics? Alas! there is precisely where the difficulty is. These men who now fear Southern opinion, and a strife of opinion, fear all opinions except their own and all strife of opinion which conflicts with theirs. It is an uneasy consciousness of the fallacy of their own views which occasions this fear of casting them into the great crucible of a common participation; and they would accomplish by the strong hand of power what they fear to trust to the sober second thought of a people united, at peace with themselves and the world."
